I was pretty open-minded and open to suggestions as I felt I'd had exactly the same hairstyle for such a long time. I had a consultation with Tasha a couple of days before about the colour, as I hadn't completely dyed my hair for more than 25 years, so I was a little nervous!

I felt my hair was in pretty good condition, but a bit dry and straggly at the ends - a cut was well overdue.

Tasha and Jonathan say...

We all had a good chat about Chris's hair at the start of the makeover, including her concerns about taking the leap to an all-over colour, how she likes to wear her hair and how often she has her hair cut. As Chris normally wears her hair straight, we thought it would make a nice change to style it curly. For the colour, we wanted to keep it as close to Chris's natural colour as possible so she felt more comfortable with a less visible re-growth. We also made the cut more manageable through thinning the sides so that Chris can have the option of wearing her tresses down, or in a clip at the back of the head.

A trim and curl make all the difference!

I was fed up with being blonde and the constant upkeep of colour, but I still wanted a hue that was very individual and really liked the pastel tones that are on-trend at the moment. Style wise, I loved the length of my hair but felt it was really shapeless. I was open to any ideas the salon could give me, too!

Jason and Emma say...
We started by colouring Charlotte's hair using L'Oréal Professionnel Majirel range. We picked a dark, all-over colour that matched her natural hair colour, but added large slices of pink, purple and blue pastel tones. After this we shampooed and conditioned the hair before using a Kérastase treatment to enhance the colour. We then cut in a lovely soft sweeping fringe and added lots of soft layers round Charlotte's face. We then cut choppy layers into the crown area and gave her a voluminous blow-dry to finish giving a soft, full look.

I love my new hue!
